Dog survives after being shot, tied to train tracks

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — A dog that was tied to railroad tracks and shot was expected to survive after her leg was amputated Thursday.

Tampa Police received three calls around 5:23 p.m. Wednesday from people reporting hearing gunshots. When they heard a dog whimpering while canvassing the neighborhood, they followed the sound to nearby train tracks. They found the mixed-breed female dog, about a year or two old, fastened to the tracks with a belt, suffering from bullet wounds in its neck and right shoulder.

They alerted the train operator to halt any oncoming traffic as they got the dog off the track, then rushed her to a veterinarian. Bullet fragments were found throughout the dog's body and led to the amputation of her right front leg. The dog was in stable condition Thursday.

"It's very calm and relaxed and just in recovery mode at this point," said Officer Derek Lang, a police spokesman.

AARON HERNANDEZ MURDER TRIAL

Victim's cellphone pinged at points on alleged route

FALL RIVER, Mass. — Tracking data shown to the jury Thursday in the murder trial of former New England Patriots tight end Aaron Hernandez indicates the victim's cellphone pinged along the same route that prosecutors say Hernandez took that night.

The data roughly tracks the route prosecutors say Hernandez took from Odin Lloyd's home to the industrial park in North Attleboro where Lloyd was found shot to death June 17, 2013. A T-Mobile employee testified about cell sites that pinged Lloyd's phone starting at 2:32 a.m., when prosecutors have said Hernandez picked Lloyd up at his home in Boston.

Among the cell sites that pinged Lloyd's phone was one near the interchange of the Massachusetts Turnpike and Route 128 at 2:53 a.m., the same time a photo was taken showing a Nissan Altima that Hernandez rented driving through a toll plaza near there.

The phone went south from there. It pinged a tower at 3:17 a.m. just north of North Attleboro. The next time it pinged a cell site was at 4:17 a.m. in the North Attleboro industrial park. Prosecutors have said he died shortly before 3:30 a.m.

Hernandez has pleaded not guilty to killing Lloyd, who was dating the sister of Hernandez's fiancée.

Also Thursday, Hernandez

lawyer James Sultan went after a Massachusetts state trooper who testified that a tire track found near Lloyd's body matched a tire on the rented Altima.

Trooper Todd Girouard said he was able to match the passenger-side rear tire to the track by using inked impressions of the tires from the car. "It made the impression," he testified under questioning from prosecutor Brian Griffin.

He said he matched it by looking at the general characteristics of the tire, such as the tread, as well as characteristics unique to the individual tire, including stones embedded in it.

But Sultan got the trooper to acknowledge the match was his opinion, then the lawyer went after his credentials. He pointed out that the trooper had only 4½ days of training on tire impressions, that he had only examined 15 tires in his career and that this was the first time he had testified in court about tire tracks.
